[] is submitting this notice pursuant to Section 8(e) of the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA). This submittal is for the above-named subject material which will be hereafter referred to by its [] name, [].

A mouse micronucleus test has been conducted at [] in []. The study was designed to meet the requirements of the OECD 404 testing guideline. In this study, three groups of seven male mice were given a single intraperitoneal dose of [] that was administered in dose levels of 2000, 1000 or 500 mg/kg. Vehicle (arachis oil) and positive control (cyclophosphamide) groups were also run concurrently. No deaths occurred, however, clinical signs of possible neurotoxicity were observed in animals dosed at or above 1000 mg/kg and included hunched posture, lethargy, body tremors, decreased respiratory rate, pilo-erection, ptosis, distended abdomen and tiptoe gait. We were made aware of these findings on Thursday, June 20, 2002.

An acute oral toxicity study was conducted in the rat at [] laboratory in []. The study was designed to meet the requirements of the OECD 423 testing guideline for Acute Oral Toxicity-Acute Toxic Class Method. In this study three Wistar rats of each sex were administered 5000 mg/kg of [] by oral gavage. No deaths occurred, however, clinical signs of possible neurotoxicity including hunched posture, lethargy and pilo-erection were observed only in the females. We were made aware of these findings on Friday June 21, 2002.
